(b)(3)/IRC § 6103(e)(7); (b)(5)/Deliberative Process Privilege; (b)(7)(A)	The withheld information is deliberative in that it contains opinions and/or recommendations reflecting the "give-and-take" of the agency's deliberative processes which may or may not have led to final agency determinations. The disclosure of this information would expose the decision-making processes of the agency in such a way as to discourage candid discussion within the agency and undermine its ability to perform its tax administration functions. It is therefore withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege under FOIA exemption 5. The document being withheld was prepared by Examination personnel to assist the executives in reviewing the status of the audit to date and determining logical next steps in the audit. There is nothing on the face of this document to indicate that any recommendations or conclusions contained therein was adopted, directly or indirectly, or incorporated by reference, by any final agency decision maker and it is, therefore, being withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege under FOIA exemption 5. This information is also being withheld pursuant to FOIA exemption 7A and FOIA exemption 3 in conjunction with 26 U.S.C. § 6103(e)(7).

The information being withheld is a chart of specific categories of information that were selectively extracted from documents either provided to the IRS by the plaintiff or assembled by the IRS on its own initiative. This information is being withheld, even though it consists, in part, of factual material, because the selective process to determine what categories and items of data for inclusion in the chart reveals the tactical and strategic thought processes of IRS personnel such that the factual data is bound up with the deliberative discussions of strategy employed by IRS personnel conducting the examination. Certain of the withheld information is deliberative in that it contains opinions and/or recommendations reflecting the "give-and-take" of the agency's deliberative processes which may or may not have led to final agency determinations. The information being withheld consists of information subject to the work product doctrine which protects documents and other memoranda prepared by an attorney in contemplation of litigation. The doctrine extends not only to documents prepared by an attorney, but also to those working under the direction of an attorney. This information is also being withheld pursuant to FOIA exemption 7A, and FOIA exemption 3 in conjunction with 26 U.S.C. § 6103(e)(7). Further, certain of the information is being withheld pursuant to FOIA exemption 3 and the confidentiality provisions of 26 U.S.C. § 6103(a) as it consists of the Federal tax return information of third party taxpayer(s) to which plaintiff has failed to demonstrate any entitlement.

(b)(3)/IRC § 6103(a); (b)(3)/IRC § 6103(e)(7); (b)(5)/Deliberative Process Privilege and Attorney-Client Privilege; (b)(7)(A)	An internal report tracking the inventory of open Exam cases reflecting the then current status of numerous audits, including plaintiffs, with issues identified and information regarding potential for tax and penalties. The withheld information is deliberative in that it contains opinions and/or recommendations reflecting the "give-and-take" of the agency's deliberative processes which may or may not have led to final agency determinations. The disclosure of this information would expose the decision-making processes of the agency in such a way as to discourage candid discussion within the agency and undermine its ability to perform its tax administration functions. It is therefore withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege under FOIA exemption 5. The information being withheld consists of information subject to the attorney client privilege which protects confidential communications between an attorney and client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice. The privilege also applies to agency counsel who provides guidance to the agency. The privilege extends not only to facts divulged by a client to his attorney in confidence, but also to opinions rendered by an attorney to his client based upon those facts. The attorney-client privilege protects confidential inter-attorney communications as well as confidential attorney-client communications. This information is also being withheld pursuant to FOIA exemption 7A, and FOIA exemption 3 in conjunction with 26 U.S.C. § 6103(e)(7). Further, certain of the information is being withheld pursuant to FOIA exemption 3 and the confidentiality provisions of 26 U.S.C. § 6103(a) as it consists of the Federal tax return information of third party taxpayer(s) to which plaintiff has failed to demonstrate any entitlement.

2017-06	Part	MSFOIA_WH031101	MSFOIA_WH031106	0.7.72.227771.1	7158	7163						Draft of internally circulated report describing the status of Microsoft and non-Microsoft taxpayers' examinations and discussing general enforcement and investigation efforts, and pressing issues communicated by email among IRS attorneys. Describes the subjects of various requests for legal advice from agency attorneys, and indicates the scope of effort and resources involved in examinations.	(b)(3)/6103(a); (b)(3)/6103(e)(7); (b)(5)/Deliberative Process Privilege and Attorney-Client Privilege; (b)(7)(A)	Information related to the examinations of taxpayers who are not Microsoft constitutes return information statutorily protected from disclosure by IRC § 6103. Return information of plaintiff could prematurely disclose to plaintiff the scope, direction, and resources available in conducting plaintiff's examination, thereby impairing Federal tax administration. Pre-decisional document used for internal discussions, which does not contain the agency's final determination with respect to the investigations being discussed. Discloses confidential inter-attorney communications, opinions, and facts divulged to attorneys by IRS. Disclosure would harm IRS law enforcement efforts by prematurely revealing information indicating the scope and direction of investigations into taxpayers' potential liability, and by providing insight into the resources available to pursue investigations.
